Dear Ms Price:

I'm writing on behalf of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) with a proposition that we hope you will consider. We recognise that things have gone horribly wrong with many of the animals you have acquired, resulting in criticism you would no doubt rather avoid. We sincerely hope you will take PETA up on the offer to provide you with £5,000 if you agree never to acquire another animal.

Companion animals are vulnerable and cannot protect themselves. They need – and deserve – our full attention for their entire lives, which can be upwards of 15 years. While your intentions may be good, the ever-growing number of animals who have either died under your supervision or been given away is impossible to ignore, and people are rightly concerned. Whatever you may offer as reasons for their suffering, relinquishment, or demise, the fact is that you are consistently harming these sensitive, sentient individuals, and I hope you agree that this is a solution.

While accepting this sum may help in some small measure with your financial stresses, it will also show you're willing to acknowledge that your home isn't suitable for animals – and that's OK. Many people would like to have an animal companion, but not everyone can or should. Such a decision would be applauded by your fans, show your children that there are considerations beyond what someone simply wants, and send a message to everyone that you intend to act in the best interests of living, feeling beings.

This offer is valid for 12 months and would involve signing a legally binding contract promising never to bring another animal into your home. We sincerely hope you will accept. As an added incentive, we'd be very pleased to send you a stunning array of beautiful plush animal toys to feature in your social media posts and to share with your children.

Kind regards,

Elisa Allen
